Mortgage Bankers and Loan Correspondents (mortgage bankers and originators)

Industry Intel

Mortgage lenders (companies) are entities that originate and fund mortgage loans, and the industry includes banks, credit unions, non-bank lenders, and mortgage banking firms. They evaluate credit, income, home value, and manage underwriting, funding, and often servicing. Mortgage brokers act as intermediaries. They do not fund loans themselves; instead, they connect borrowers with lenders. They gather borrower info, shop different lenders and products, submit the loan file to a lender for underwriting, and guide the borrower through the process. They're paid via broker fees or commissions.

Mortgage broker fees are typically between 1% and 3% of the face value of the loan. Services involve finding financing, and brokers often sell mortgages from a few select vendors. The lenders that they represent may also pay either a fee or a YSP (yield-spread premium). If a mortgage broker can sell a consumer a higher interest rate than he/she would ordinarily qualify for, the financing institution rewards the brokers with a YSP. Mortgage brokers compete with banks and other lenders such as credit unions.

Mortgage brokers experience increased demand for services when the housing market is trending up and decreased demand for services when the housing market contracts.

The loan broker industry reports revenue of $9.1 billion. In 2025, estimated U.S. mortgage origination volume was approximately $2.05 trillion, including $1.36 trillion in purchase originations and $0.69 trillion in refinances. Through 2025, brokers accounted for approximately 15.8% of GSE-backed purchase loans, compared with 10.6% of cash-out refinances, where retail and correspondent channels remained dominant.

The U.S. mortgage lending market is highly fragmented, with approximately 24,447 state-licensed mortg companies and more than 7,900 federally registered depository institutions engage in mortgage lending. … top 10 lenders in 2025 accounted for about 23% to 25% of all U.S. home loan originations by loan count and dollar volume.

Discovery Questions

- What underwriting or credit-score criteria changes do you expect in the next 12–18 months, and how do those changes affect which borrowers you target or can accept?
- Which products or loan types (e.g. HELOCs, non-QM, government-insured) generate the highest margins for you today, and which do you believe are under-leveraged in your current portfolio?
- How do you segment your marketing leads by borrower profile (first-time buyer, credit profile, product type), and what data do you use to personalize outreach and educational content?

Know the Customers

Target Customers

Consumers planning to purchase a home are the market for these services.

In 2025, 7% of home buyers say they contacted a bank or mortgage lender as their first step in the home-buying process. That rate was higher (11%) among first-time buyers.

62% of all buyers used a fixed-rate mortgage (77% of first-time buyers and 65% of repeat buyers, use a fixed-rate mortgage). 51% of first-time buyers used a conventional loan to finance their home, 28% used an FHA loan, and 8% used a VA loan. The share of first-time buyers using an FHA loan dropped from 55% in 2009 to 28% in 2025.

11% of buyers financed 100% of their entire purchase price with a mortgage, the same as in 2024. The median percent financed for first-time buyers was 90%, down slightly from 91%. The median percent financed for repeat buyers was 77%, which is the same as in 2024.

Baby boomers remain the largest generational group among recent U.S. homebuyers, accounting for 42% of all purchases, unchanged from the prior year. This group tends to be well-capitalized, often buying larger, more expensive homes, and many are moving due to retirement or downsizing. Because of their financial stability and sizable transaction amounts, they represent a critical segment for mortgage lenders seeking high-value loans. Marketers prioritize this group due to their relatively lower-risk profiles and higher creditworthiness.

Target Customers by Mile Radius

Most customers are drawn from a 80 mile radius. Keep in mind that some mortgage firms are now operating online, so geographic region is not closely linked to their market definition.

Top Factors People Consider When Choosing This Type Of Account

- Interest rates and loan costs: 58% of homebuyers ranked the lowest lender rate among their top two considerations. Borrowers also prioritize lender fees, closing costs and total loan cost.
- Speed and certainty: 18.8% of borrowers cited the fastest process as the factor most influencing their lender choice. Quick, predictable closings and clear communication are key.
- Recommendations and referrals: 41% of borrowers ranked a recommendation from a real estate agent among their top two criteria.
- Transparency, trust and reputation: Brand trust accounted for approximately 14.4% of influence on lender choice. Clear communication, customer reviews and a strong reputation can help build confidence.
- Closing and approval certainty: 38% of buyers included a guarantee that the lender would close on time among their top two lender-selection criteria. Fast pre-approval and greater certainty can help reduce buyer anxiety.
