Industry Intel

Used car dealers sell and lease used vehicles to consumers and small businesses. The retailers typically display available vehicles in a lot and negotiate price and financing with potential customers. Dealerships may offer benefits such as certifications to entice buyers.

The nation's used car market includes nearly 130,000 used car businesses with revenue totaling $173.9 billion. The used market is large overall, and these dealers must compete with the private sale market. Selling used cars over the internet has also changed market dynamics to some extent.

There were approximately 16.8 million used cars sold in the U.S. in 2024 through dealerships. When private and other sales are included, over 36 million used cars are sold each year in the U.S. The average used vehicle age in 2024 was 12.6 years old. However, the average age of a traded-in car in 2024 was 9.4 years.

The average list price for a used car is $25,128 in 2025.

Industry leader CarMax reports that it competes with other used-vehicle dealerships based on the following:

- Low, no-haggle prices
- Financing
- Broad selection
- High-quality vehicles
- Customer-friendly sales process
- Selection of the most popular makes and models
- Availability of vehicles both on site and via website
- Quality of vehicles
- Locations of retail stores
- Guarantees and warranties

There is more research involved in used cars as opposed to new. What they are looking for highly influences this process and it varies per consumer.

Consumers typically purchase used vehicles to save money, but they are still interested in quality.
In the antique market, the purchase of vehicles is linked to interest in the specific make and model as well as the condition of the vehicle. In these cases, consumers may be purchasing a vehicle as an investment or to complete a collection.

For Buy-Here Pay-Here dealers, availability of financing and vehicle options is important.

Numerous used car dealerships accept trade-ins and buyers are focused on price as they seek a replacement used vehicle.

To boost their own supply of used vehicles, dealerships are promoting offers to purchase used vehicles from consumers. There's major opportunity for this, as Cars.com reports that 41% of its in-market audience aims to sell their vehicle prior to making a purchase.
