Industry Intel

Accounting firms provide services ranging from income tax advice and form preparation for consumers to bookkeeping, annual report preparation, financial statement auditing, and financial management advice to public and private companies. The annual revenue in this industry is about $140 billion. Professionals with the designation Certified Public Accountants (CPA) have met a required mix of education and experience and passed an exam which results in a license. Nearly 90,000 firms operate in this sector, employing almost 575,000 employees. About 50,000 are CPA firms while other firms specialize in tax preparation services, bookkeeping or other accounting services. CPA companies generally offer audit, accounting and related management services to large and small businesses. These professionals, by law, can audit and comment on the financial statements of public companies.

The top four firms are estimated to hold about 35% of the industry's revenue. Recently, firms have expanded their offerings to include cybersecurity assurance and consulting. Accounting franchise firms may contract with smaller business owners to provide services ranging from payroll and income tax forms to general bookkeeping.

Consumers also use accountants, bookkeepers and other financial professionals to file income taxes and to plan tax strategies. The outlook for this industry is strong as the tax code becomes more complex.

Related Industries

Forensic accountants are Certified Public Accountants (CPAs) who specialize in investigative accounting. They work in a variety of industries, including government agencies, accounting firms, law firms, corporate security, and consulting firms.

Forensic accountants perform a variety of tasks, including: analyzing financial data, identifying financial irregularities, recovering lost assets, providing financial evidence in court, and collaborating with legal authorities. For forensic accountants, the busy season is not dependent on a timeline in the year but on their involvement in a case and court schedules.

The swell in white-collar crimes, coupled with stringent financial regulations, has significantly driven the growth of the financial investigative industry. This surge underscores a heightened need for services capable of detecting and addressing financial misconduct.

Industry revenue has grown at a CAGR of 2.4% over the past five years to reach an estimated $8.9 billion in 2024.

Realization rate is a financial metric that measures the percentage of billable work that is actually invoiced and collected from clients. It's a key metric for accounting firms to assess their profitability and efficiency. Realization rate can be affected by pricing decisions. For example, a firm might have a high realization rate due to low billing rates, which can result in lost revenue. On the other hand, large accounting firms might have low realization rates because they routinely offer large discounts on standard rates.
