Industry Intel

Financial advisory services professionals provide guidance to consumers on a wide range of financial topics. This guidance may include recommendations on where and how to invest assets and what insurance to buy. Some financial services professionals also sell various financial investment vehicles such as insurance policies. These professionals typically work on a fixed-fee or percentage-of-assets fee basis. A financial advisory service may work with a client for a limited period of time to develop a plan, or they may work with a client on a long-term basis.

These professionals usually have at least a four-year college degree and may have additional professional designations indicating they have studied for and received certificates in specific areas. Professionals may work for themselves or in small businesses. They compete with their counterparts who work at large financial or insurance companies.

The Bureau of Labor Statistics projects faster-than-average growth in this industry as a result of the looming retirement years just ahead for the large demographic group – baby boomers.

The financial data service provider industry includes about 295 businesses with revenue of $22.4 billion in 2024.

Advisory revenues in the U.S. wealth management grew from approximately $150 billion in 2015 to an estimated $260 billion in 2024, reflecting a compound annual growth rate (CAGR) of 6.4%. This growth is driven by an increasing number of advised relationships, which are expected to reach between 67 million and 71 million by 2034, a 28% to 34% increase from 2024.

DAY TRADERS

These investors hope to make money on the stock market by identifying trends and trading shares in specific companies at the right time. In order to succeed, they need access to an online brokerage. These brokerages give them access to real-time market data. Day traders also try to work through a brokerage with a low-fee structure because they make so many trades. These investors also pay taxes on their earning, which is the same rate as their regular tax rate.

Additionally, these investors typically buy and sell a stock on the same day, usually based on what they believe is momentum because of specific news.

When traders initially begin in the industry, they believe they can outsmart the market. Experts recommend that day traders spend a significant amount of time researching and establishing a strategy. In addition, they are legally required, in some cases, to maintain a reserve account of $25,000.

Day trading continues to attract new participants due to its potential for quick gains and the influence of social media and "finfluencers." However, the high failure rate among day traders and the dominance of automated trading systems pose significant challenges.

Day traders may learn the requirements of the profession from experienced friends and mentors. Other traders take courses that may extend from a few days to several months. Traders need education from experienced instructors, technical analysis tools and a platform that offers real-time simulations.

Experts point out that many day traders do not make any money and most drop out within a year or two of starting. Some of these investors have the attitude that trading is like gambling, and they only invest what they feel they can afford to lose.

The future of day trading will likely be shaped by technological advancements, regulatory changes and the ongoing shift toward more automated trading strategies. The industry faces challenges from high-frequency trading algorithms, which make it increasingly difficult for manual traders to compete. Traders will need to adapt by developing sophisticated strategies and managing risk effectively to remain competitive.

Financial Advisory Services to Promote Financial Wellness Month

As consumers plan for a new calendar year, they make resolutions. Often resolutions center on improving diet and health. Through that effort, consumers hope to lose weight. They may also promise themselves to start new habits such as volunteering for a charity or joining a social group. January is also the perfect time to review financial wellness. After spending too much during the holiday season, consumers want to start saving money, pay down debt and plan for their financial future. Tax return preparers and financial planners can promote their services as Financial Wellness Month approaches and encourage consumers to make an appointment as a first step to a new financial future.

Top Advertising Media Used

For financial advisory services in the U.S., the most effective advertising channels and media for 2024 and 2025 include:

Based on the target audience, LinkedIn, Facebook, Twitter, and Instagram are highly recommended advertising social media platforms. For example, LinkedIn is particularly effective for reaching high-net-worth individuals and professionals. They may share educational content, industry insights and client testimonials to build trust and establish authority.

Blog posts, webinars, videos, podcasts, whitepapers, and e-books help position advisors as thought leaders and build credibility. Video content can help explain complex financial topics in an engaging manner.

Email marketing uses newsletters to maintain regular communication with clients and prospects, such as providing updates and insights.

Referral marketing can encourage satisfied clients to refer friends and family and also deliver excellent service and offer incentives.

Website optimization, including user-friendly, mobile-responsive and clear messaging, helps communicate services and value propositions.

Younger consumers, Gen Zers and millennials, are looking for an advisor who:

- Shares their values
- Saves them time
- Keeps them up to date

Older consumers, Gen Xers and boomers want an advisor who:

- Understands their priorities at this point in their lives
- Has a proven track record
- Offers professional advice they don't have
- Offers long-term view, especially in terms of retirement

In addition to transferring a client's assets to the next generation and retaining them as clients, advisors can shift their approach to investment advice for the inheritee, according to industry professionals.
